ENGLISH COAST TOWNS

IN GREATEST FEAR OF
ANOTHER GERMAN RAID

West Hartlepool, Eng., Dec. 30.—English east coast towns are panic-stricken since the German raid upon Scarborough, Whitby and the Hartlepool. Confession in the power of the British navy to keep Germans away from England has weakened and there is constant dread of the presence of the German ships. If not the landing of German troops.

The mayor of the Hartlepool and the other stricken towns have organized volunteer constabularies and are making an effort to hold the excited public in check. Proclamations have been made that civilians must stay in doors should the bombardment recur and yield to the orders of the constables but there is a general impatience with all sorts of authority. Nearly all civilians are armed and they announce they will look after themselves. Travel by automobile at night is hazardous as excited guards stop all motor cars frequently with a flourish of guns and revolvers. The patrol ships Patrol and Doon, which guard Hartlepool, were lying in the harbor the morning of the German raid but are said by civilians to have had no steam. It is also charged they were partly dismantled and had to be towed out from the docks before they could get into action. At any rate, they were so slow that the Germans had an opportunity to shell the Hartlepool for nearly 45 minutes before the navy craft offered effective opposition. Officers of the two patrol ships had a banquet at the leading hotel in West Hartlepool the night before the raid.

An investigation of the navy's action has been demanded by the mayors of the ruined towns and the result of the prospective inquiry by the admiralty is awaited impatiently along the east coast, which no longer goes to sleep at night with a feeling of security.

Many of the families living near the coast have moved back into the interior. The large number of women and children killed during the recent bombardment has especially excited the dread of the inhabitants and whenever possible the heads of families are sending their wives and children beyond the possible range of German ships.

At Hartlepool, the Germans fired with amazing accuracy. The first shell they directed toward the town knocked over twelve soldiers who were manning one of the coast guns. None of them was killed but several were stunned.

The Germans also managed to strike the gasometers, water tower, smokestacks on big factories, telegraph poles and other objects which stood above the level of the roofs in the two flat towns. The railway lines were hit in several places and traffic was temporarily suspended.

Before the raid all telegraphic and telephone connection with the harbor is said to have been cut off suddenly. In fact, the two Hartlepool are both said to have been cut off entirely from the outside world for a time before the shells wrecked many poles and completed the supposed work of some spy. The military has now taken over all wires and communication with the coast towns is very difficult.

The spy fear has now become so acute all along the coast that even civilians provided with credentials above dispute are subjected to arrest by the civil officials. The government has refrained from issuing any sort of instructions to the east coast districts as to how they shall deport themselves in case of raid or invasion, with the result that the populace is running wild.

Should an invasion occur with the public in its present panicky condition, an attack would doubtless be made upon the invaders by excited civilians which would provoke the general destruction of towns and result in the death of large numbers of civilians who are thoroughly disorganized and without any means of offering resistance even to a small landing party.

Detachments of Kitchener's new army are stationed at various places along the east coast but these for the most part are inexperienced and without equipment to meet an invading army. This fact is thoroughly appreciated by the populace which takes the position that it must make preparations to fight its own battles in the event the navy does not check the Germans.

Rumors are constantly in circulation along this coast about raids at other points.

The hull of an 8,000-ton freight boat which was building in the local shipyard was completely penetrated by a German shell during the bombardment Wednesday morning and several smaller craft were slightly damaged. However, the damage in the shipping section was much slighter than at first believed.

CORSET SALESMEN

HERE FOR CONVENTION

The annual convention of the salesmen of the La Resista corset factory took place this morning in the offices on Norman street, which about 20 knights of the grip as well as the advertising forces gathered. The meeting was opened by Oliver G. Righter, secretary of the company, and M. Moore Downer, president of the company, greeted the incoming men. J. T. Ashbrook and R. Waters of the advertising department told of the forthcoming advertising and Miss C. L. Hard spoke of style possibilities in 1915. A banquet at the Stratfield tonight will close the convention.

KAISER HOST TO 1,000 OFFICERS AT XMAS FEAST

London, Dec. 29.—A Copenhagen despatch to the Daily Mail says: "The Kaiser had his Christmas dinner with nearly a thousand officers and men at the great General Headquarters at the Hotel de Ville, in a town in northern France. An altar was erected at one end of the hall, in front of which was a small manger with the infant Christ.

"The festival is described as having been simple, but very impressive. It was at the Kaiser's personal wish that he was invited to be present. The hall was decorated with holly and huns with pictures of the Emperor and German Generals. There were Christmas trees with candles on the tables. Every officer present received a portrait of the Kaiser as a Christmas gift and every soldier got a tobacco pouch and cigars.

"The festival began with all present standing and singing the old German carol 'Thou Glad and Holy Christmas Time.' At the conclusion of the singing cheers were given for the Kaiser. The Emperor acknowledged the cheers by a salute and after saying 'Good-evening, comrades' spoke as follows:

"We are gathered here armed to celebrate a holy festival, which we used to celebrate in our homes. Our thoughts are turned to our own at home, whom we have to thank for many gifts. We see in the multitudes at these tables that God has decreed that the enemy should force us to celebrate the festival here.

"We have been assailed and we are defending ourselves. May God grant peace from this festival. With Him for our country will arise to a spirit of victory, which we shall ultimately reach after severe fighting. We are on hostile ground and the points of our swords are turned against the enemy, but our hearts are turned toward God. We say, as once did the Grand Elector, 'To the dust with all enemies of Germany.' Amen."

"The Kaiser then visited the various tables and exchanged gifts with several officers. The diners sang 'Deutschland Ueber Alles' and the Kaiser left the hall."
